Narrative Reflection – Teacher 1

Teacher 1 has 10 years of teaching experience.

The students' understanding developed during the lesson because she started combining CELTA methods with her own teaching methods, particularly in skills such as listening and speaking.

One thing that helped students really understand the lesson was the use of interactive and playful techniques, which helped students stay focused and engaged during the activities.

However, some students found it difficult to produce the target language fluently and correctly during freer practice, especially when they needed to express their own ideas.

During the lesson, students used language to take part in activities and show their understanding because the instructions were simple and clear and the tasks were clearly staged, which supported their participation.

However, the students experienced some language-related challenges, such as a limited lexical range and incorrect sentence structures, which sometimes affected their fluency.

During the lesson, students worked with materials such as visual prompts and freer communicative tasks, which encouraged them to interact and express their ideas.

To help students understand what was expected in this activity, the teacher provided clear instructions and structured the tasks step by step, guiding students through the different stages.

The teacher noticed that students understood the lesson when they were able to complete the activities and respond appropriately during the tasks.

One task or concept that was particularly difficult for students in this lesson was using the target language spontaneously during freer communicative stages.

To help students understand what was expected in this task, the teacher provided examples and guided practice before moving to freer activities.

The teacher realised that students no longer needed the same level of support when they successfully completed the task and became more confident in using the target language independently.

Narrative Reflection – Teacher 2

Teacher 2 has six years of teaching experience.

During the lesson, the students' understanding developed gradually as the teacher guided them through the activities and encouraged them to actively participate in discussions and tasks. By engaging with the activities and interacting with each other, students were able to clarify their understanding of the topic and improve their ability to express their ideas.

One aspect that helped students understand the lesson particularly well was the use of clear explanations and examples, which allowed students to connect new information with what they already knew. Through this process, they were able to develop both their understanding of the content and their ability to communicate about it.

However, some students found it difficult to express their ideas clearly in English, particularly when they wanted to explain more complex thoughts. In these cases, they sometimes hesitated or struggled to find the appropriate vocabulary or grammatical structures.

During the lesson, students used language to participate in the activities mainly through discussion, answering questions, and responding to prompts provided by the teacher. These opportunities to speak allowed them to demonstrate their understanding while also practicing their language skills.

Despite this, students occasionally experienced language-related difficulties, such as limited vocabulary and uncertainty about sentence structure, which sometimes made it challenging for them to communicate their ideas effectively.

Throughout the lesson, students worked with different types of materials and activities, including tasks that required them to interact with their classmates and reflect on the content being discussed. These activities helped them engage more deeply with the lesson.

To help students understand what was expected of them, the teacher gave clear instructions and provided guidance during the activities, ensuring that students understood both the task and the learning objective.

The teacher could see that students understood the lesson when they were able to respond appropriately to questions and participate confidently in the activities.

One task that was particularly difficult for students involved expressing their ideas in English with accuracy and fluency, especially when the topic required them to explain more complex concepts.

To support them in these situations, the teacher provided additional explanations and examples, helping students gradually develop their confidence and ability to use the language.

The teacher realised that students no longer needed the same level of support when they were able to complete the activities independently and communicate their ideas more confidently during the lesson.

Narrative Reflection – Teacher 3

Teacher 3 has seven years of teaching experience.

During the lesson, the students' understanding developed gradually as they engaged with the tasks and interacted with both the teacher and their classmates. At the beginning of the lesson, many students were unsure about how to approach the activities, but as the lesson progressed, they became more confident and began to participate more actively.

One factor that helped students understand the lesson more effectively was the use of clear explanations and structured activities. By breaking the lesson into smaller steps and providing examples, the teacher helped students understand what they needed to do and how they could approach the task.

However, some students found it difficult to express their ideas using the appropriate vocabulary and grammatical structures. Even when they understood the concept being discussed, they sometimes struggled to communicate their thoughts clearly in English.

During the lesson, students used language to participate in activities mainly by answering questions, discussing ideas with their classmates, and responding to prompts provided by the teacher. These opportunities allowed them to practice using the target language while demonstrating their understanding of the topic.

Despite this, students experienced some challenges related to language use, particularly when they needed to form complete sentences or choose the correct vocabulary to explain their ideas. In some cases, they hesitated or relied on simpler language to communicate their thoughts.

Throughout the lesson, students worked with different materials and activities designed to support their understanding, including tasks that required them to discuss ideas and respond to the content presented in the lesson.

To help students understand what was expected of them, the teacher provided clear instructions and guided them through the different stages of the activity, ensuring that they understood both the task and the objective of the lesson.

The teacher realised that students understood the lesson when they were able to complete the activities and respond to questions in a way that showed they had understood the topic being discussed.

One task that students found particularly challenging was expressing their ideas clearly and accurately in English, especially when they wanted to explain more detailed or complex ideas.

To support students in these situations, the teacher provided additional explanations and examples, helping them develop greater confidence in using the target language.

The teacher recognised that students no longer needed the same level of support when they were able to participate more independently and communicate their ideas more clearly during the activities.

Narrative Reflection – Teacher 4

Teacher 4 has over ten years of teaching experience.

During the lesson, the students' understanding developed gradually as they engaged with the different activities and interacted with the content presented in class. At the beginning of the lesson, some students were uncertain about how to approach the tasks, but as the lesson progressed, they became more confident and were able to participate more actively in the activities.

One aspect that helped students understand the lesson more effectively was the use of clear explanations and examples, which allowed them to connect new information with their existing knowledge. By providing structured guidance and gradually increasing the level of difficulty of the activities, the teacher supported students in developing both their understanding of the topic and their ability to express their ideas. However, some students experienced difficulties when they needed to express their ideas clearly using the target language, particularly when they were required to use more complex vocabulary or grammatical structures. In these situations, they sometimes hesitated or relied on simpler expressions to communicate their thoughts.

During the lesson, students used language to participate in activities mainly by answering questions, discussing ideas with their classmates, and responding to prompts provided by the teacher. These interactions allowed them to demonstrate their understanding while also practicing their language skills.

Despite this, some students experienced language-related challenges, such as limited vocabulary and uncertainty about grammatical accuracy, which occasionally affected their ability to communicate effectively.

Throughout the lesson, students worked with different materials and activities designed to support their learning, including tasks that encouraged discussion, reflection, and collaboration with other students.

To help students understand what was expected of them, the teacher provided clear instructions and guided them through the activities step by step, ensuring that they understood both the purpose of the task and the expected outcome.

The teacher realised that students had understood the lesson when they were able to complete the activities successfully and respond appropriately to questions about the topic.

One task that students found particularly challenging involved expressing their ideas using the target language with both accuracy and confidence, especially when they needed to provide more detailed explanations.

To support students in these situations, the teacher provided additional clarification and examples, helping them gradually build confidence and improve their language use.

The teacher recognised that students no longer needed the same level of support when they were able to complete the tasks independently and communicate their ideas more effectively during the lesson.

Narrative Reflection – Teacher 5

Teacher 5 has more than five years of teaching experience.

During the lesson, the students' understanding developed progressively as they became more engaged with the activities and the topic being discussed. At the beginning of the lesson, some students were unsure about how to express their ideas, but as the lesson progressed and they received guidance from the teacher, they gradually became more confident in participating in the activities.

One factor that helped students understand the lesson more effectively was the structured design of the lesson and the clear explanation of the tasks. By breaking the activities into smaller stages and guiding students through each step, the teacher helped them understand both the content and the language required for the task.

However, some students found it difficult to express their ideas using appropriate vocabulary and grammatical structures, particularly when they wanted to explain more complex thoughts or opinions. In these situations, they sometimes hesitated or relied on simpler language to communicate their ideas.

During the lesson, students used language to participate in activities mainly by answering questions, discussing ideas with their classmates, and responding to the prompts provided by the teacher. These interactions allowed them to demonstrate their understanding while also practicing the target language.

Despite this, some students experienced challenges related to language use, such as limited vocabulary and uncertainty about grammatical accuracy, which sometimes affected their ability to express their ideas clearly.

Throughout the lesson, students worked with different materials and activities designed to support their understanding of the topic, including tasks that required them to discuss ideas, respond to questions, and reflect on the content of the lesson.

To help students understand what was expected of them, the teacher provided clear instructions and examples, ensuring that students understood how to complete the activities and what kind of responses were expected.

The teacher realised that students had understood the lesson when they were able to complete the activities successfully and respond appropriately to questions about the topic.

One task that students found particularly difficult involved expressing their ideas clearly and accurately in English, especially when they needed to explain their reasoning or provide more detailed explanations.

To support students in these situations, the teacher provided additional guidance and clarification, helping them gradually develop more confidence in using the language.

The teacher recognised that students no longer needed the same level of support when they were able to participate more independently in the activities and communicate their ideas with greater confidence.

Narrative Reflection – Teacher 6

Teacher 6 has approximately five years of teaching experience.

During the lesson, the students' understanding developed gradually as they interacted with the activities and responded to the teacher's questions. At the beginning of the lesson, some students were uncertain about how to approach the tasks, but as the lesson progressed and they received more guidance, they became more confident and were able to participate more actively.

One factor that helped students understand the lesson was the use of clear explanations and structured activities, which allowed them to follow the progression of the lesson more easily. Through guided practice and interaction with their classmates, students were able to clarify their understanding of the topic and practice using the language.

However, some students found it difficult to express their ideas using the appropriate vocabulary and grammatical structures. Even when they understood the topic conceptually, they sometimes struggled to communicate their ideas clearly in English.

During the lesson, students used language to participate in the activities mainly by answering questions, responding to prompts, and interacting with their classmates during discussions. These opportunities allowed them to demonstrate their understanding while also practicing their language skills.

Despite this, students experienced some language-related challenges, particularly when they needed to form complete sentences or use new vocabulary accurately. In some cases, they hesitated or relied on simpler language when expressing their ideas.

Throughout the lesson, students worked with different materials and activities designed to support their learning, including tasks that encouraged them to engage with the topic and communicate their ideas.

To help students understand what was expected of them, the teacher provided clear instructions and explanations, guiding students through the different stages of the lesson.

The teacher recognised that students understood the lesson when they were able to complete the activities successfully and respond appropriately to the teacher's questions.

One task that students found particularly difficult involved using the target language to explain their ideas clearly and accurately, especially when the topic required more detailed explanations.

To support students in these situations, the teacher provided additional explanations and examples, helping them develop greater confidence in using the language.

The teacher realised that students no longer needed the same level of support when they were able to participate more independently in the activities and communicate their ideas more effectively.

Narrative Reflection – Teacher 7

Teacher 7 has several years of teaching experience working with young learners.

During the lesson, the students' understanding developed gradually as they engaged with the activities and interacted with the teacher and their classmates. At the beginning of the lesson, some students were unsure about how to respond to the tasks, but as the lesson progressed and they became more familiar with the topic and the language used in the activities, they became more confident and participated more actively.

One factor that helped students understand the lesson more effectively was the use of visual materials and interactive activities, which allowed students to connect the concepts presented in the lesson with concrete examples. By observing images, discussing them, and completing creative tasks, students were able to develop a deeper understanding of the topic.

However, some students found it difficult to express their ideas clearly in English, particularly when they wanted to explain more complex thoughts or interpretations. In these cases, they sometimes relied on their first language or used simpler expressions to communicate their ideas.

During the lesson, students used language to participate in activities mainly by describing visual materials, answering questions, and interacting with the teacher and their classmates. These opportunities allowed them to demonstrate their understanding while also practicing their language skills.

Despite this, students experienced some challenges related to language use, particularly when they needed to use new vocabulary or construct complete sentences to explain their ideas. This sometimes led to hesitation or limited responses.

Throughout the lesson, students worked with a variety of materials and activities, including visual prompts and creative tasks that encouraged them to interpret the content and express their understanding through both language and artistic expression.

To help students understand what was expected of them, the teacher provided clear instructions and examples, guiding students through the activities and supporting them when necessary.

The teacher realised that students understood the lesson when they were able to complete the tasks successfully and respond appropriately to the questions related to the topic.

One task that students found particularly challenging involved expressing their ideas in English when the concepts were more abstract or required more detailed explanations.

To support students in these situations, the teacher provided additional guidance and clarification, helping them gradually develop confidence in using the language.

The teacher recognised that students no longer needed the same level of support when they were able to complete the activities independently and communicate their ideas more confidently during the lesson.
